Bradley comes tumbling down

"The exercises attending the laying of the corner stone (sic) of Bradley hall (sic) at Dickinson Seminary this afternoon will begin promptly at 2 o'clock, and will occupy about an hour and a half. The floor of the new building is laid and will be seated to accommodate several hundred persons. If the weather is unfavorable, the exercise will be held in the Seminary Chapel."

So reported the Williamsport Daily Gazette and Bulletin on the morning of Tuesday, April 23, 1895, in announcing the program for the cornerstone laying of former Bradley Hall on campus. A copy of this edition of the Gazette and Bulletin was found in the small, copper-coated box encased in the cornerstone of Bradley Hall for more than 85 years. The box was uncovered in late August, when the dilapidated and fire-damaged building was razed.

Other publications in the box were the April 22, 1895, editions of the Williamsport Evening News, Sun and The Times; an April 18, 1895, edition of the Pennsylvania Methodist--a leading prohibitionist periodical of the day; an April 17, 1895, edition of the Central Christian Advocate of St. Louis; an April 18, 1895, edition of the Christian Advocate of New York City; a Williamsport Dickinson Seminary catalog for 1893-1894; the April, 1895, issue of the Dickinson Liberal; the March 25, 1895, issue of the Dickinson Seminary Journal; the published minutes of the Central Pennsylvania Conference of 1895, and an appeal of the Preachers' Aid Society of the Central Pennsylvania Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of 1884.

The copper box also held handwritten lists of the names of students and faculty in the 1894-95 academic year, the board of managers of the Preachers' Aid Society, speakers at the cornerstone laying ceremony, the school's board of directors, and the contributors to Bradley Hall.

A handwritten copy of the Act to Incorporate the seminary, approved March 27, 1862, and a business card of W. H. C. Huffman & Sons, architects and builders, of Williamsport, also were enclosed.

According to the Gazette and Bulletin story, the following program for the laying of the cornerstone was observed:

Student trades badge for Bible

Oscar Wodrig, Jr., of Williamsport, is a Lycoming College student, but hardly typical.

Beyond taking a full load of classes at Lycoming and Williamsport Area Community College, Wodrig divides his days and nights presiding as pastor of two area churches and being a husband and father of three. Until recently, he worked full-time as an evening-shift city policeman.

The enormity of his daily routine became overwhelming, however, soon Aug. 31. Wodrig turned in his police badge. He finally conceded that the demands of his time--with another school term starting--were too great.

"If you didn't have to sleep, you'd be in good shape," quips the 10-year veteran of the police force.

A sophomore, Wodrig is enrolled in the cross-registration program of the two colleges, with this semester's schedule including two classes at Lycoming and three at WACC. After the 1980-81 academic year, Wodrig expects to continue his education exclusively at Lycoming and complete a degree in

OSCAR WODRIG, JR.

As is obvious, considerable pomp and ceremony accompanied the laying of the cornerstone. Stories about the event shared space in the Williamsport newspapers with stories under headlines such as "No Fight Against Free Silver," a story announcing the Grover Cleveland administration's opposition to silver; "Silver May Win," a story speculating that silver would win support despite the president's opposition; "Duquesne in Flames," a story detailing a $100,000 fire in the Pittsburgh business district, and "Over 87 MPH," a story about a speed record-setting Pennsylvania Railroad train.

The contents of the cornerstone box have been placed in the college historical room, where they will be stored and filed by Dr. Loring Priest, professor emeritus of history and the college's unofficial historian and archivist.

"Challenge!" What images come to your mind when you hear that word? Perhaps the image of an obstacle course? Of some barrier looming before you? Of some chasm to bridge? Or some record to break? When I hear the word, I can see sprinters straining at the starting blocks, concentrating on beating the clock.

A more difficult kind of challenge is posed by darkness, by being lost at sea, by a lack of direction. Without vision our efforts, however energetic, flounder. Lycoming College faces both kinds of challenges.

The Kresge Foundation has issued a challenge—to break our own record in fund raising and, simultaneously, to retain a realistic vision of what Lycoming College can achieve.

The Kresge challenge comes in the form of a challenge grant. This major foundation has promised Lycoming College $150,000 toward the cost of the Physical Education/Recreation Center if we raise the additional funds needed to pay for the new complex by May, 1981.

Prior to the Partners in Progress Fund Drive, a feasibility study conducted by a professional fund-raising firm indicated that a realistic goal for our 5pm campaign would be $1,700,000.

Bradley (Continued)

Steinbacher Enterprises, Inc., of Williamsport, the college's building and grounds crews salvaged seven pieces of the delicate terra cotta that adorned Bradley's west and south walls.

Pieces salvaged include the breasts of Beethoven, Michelangelo and Mozart, two crucifixes, and figures of a lion and Satan. They are being stored and preserved.

It took approximately a week to raze Bradley due to its proximity to the Science Building. A large clamshell shovel was used instead of a wrecking ball; it took the solid brick building apart chunk by chunk.

Much of the rubble was hauled away to landfills. What remained behind was used to fill in the basement. The site has been covered with clean fill, landscaped and seeded.

Cost of the demolition was $14,000, or only $4,200 less than its original construction cost.

Bradley Hall was named in honor of one of its principal donors, the Hon. Thomas Bradley, of Philadelphia, who served as president of the college board of trustees from 1898 to 1920 and as a trustee from 1894 to 1921. Its construction was part of a building program launched by the Rev. Edward J. Gray, president of Dickinson Seminary from 1874 to 1905. The building served initially as an art and music conservatory; it was used later as a library and for faculty offices and classrooms.

The generous response to the tireless efforts of volunteers working in this campaign has yielded more than $2,000,000 in gifts and pledges. Surely it is time to quit and celebrate!

It is time to be grateful but not to quit. Although we have surpassed our original goal, we haven't accomplished all we can and must. Our hope has always been for a debt-free facility, but we thought that might take 20 years. The Kresge Foundation has challenged us to realize our dream this year!

Is it a reasonable expectation? It is if we have the vision to expect the possible.

Sometimes we expect too much, especially from others. More often we expect too little, especially from ourselves. And what have we expected of Lycoming College through the years? Hasn't experience proved over and over that Lycoming exceeds our expectations?

Did we expect in 1947 not only to become a four-year college but also to attract a faculty fully qualified to teach graduate courses should they be asked to do so? Today, more than two-thirds of the faculty hold Ph.D.'s. Did we in 1947 expect a campus valued at approximately $1,450,000 to grow to a value of $41,886,000, even before our children could follow us to this campus for their college education?

The giants who led this institution through the years surely had such visions. I doubt that Jim Skeath, John Long or Fred Wertz would be surprised by the progress we have seen. Yet, some of the rest of us are still blind to their vision. We still haven't learned to expect what our own experience has proved is possible.

What, then, is the real challenge? The Kresge Foundation has identified it clearly. It is not just to break our own records in fund raising. It is to retain a vision of what is really possible for Lycoming College. To be realistic demands not that we bridle our expectations; realism requires us to expect the possible, which is more than we've expected of ourselves until now.

What do you expect now? Show us by responding to the Kresge challenge. If you haven't made a pledge yet, do so today. If you have, extend it one more year if you can and we'll show the world that the Kresge Foundation knows how to pick a winner!

psychology. His reason for studying psychology?

"You are dealing with people (in the church), so psych can't hurt you," he said. "You can be a little more professional (with a psychology background) when you handle people."

People: they are Wodrig's forte. While he acknowledges that Bibles are inseparable from ministers, and the tough cop on the beat is necessary, Wodrig believes that both professions are people-first occupations. Arresting suspected law-breakers is only a part of the law and order process. You also must "go out and talk with him" and try understanding why a devious act was committed, according to Wodrig. He noted that the role of the modern policeman is more of a social worker than enforcer.

His approach in church is similar. Not only does Wodrig want to be an effective pastor, he wants to be able to work with and help people.

Wodrig is bridging the gap between police work and the ministry—normally thought of as disparate pursuits. The people connection, he said, has made the transition from patrolman to pastor easier. He believes that police work has given him an insight into human nature needed by clergymen. When human considerations are emphasized, patrolman to pastor is merely "like a transfer" within the same institution, he said.

Wodrig toyed with the idea of entering the ministry for a long time.

"I had a nagging feeling that I wanted to do more," said the former Sunday school teacher and youth fellowship counselor at Wesley United Methodist Church in Williamsport. "I guess when you get your calling, you start."

His calling came in July, 1978, when he began the testing and studying procedures that resulted in the issuance of a "local pastor" license to him early last summer. In July, he occupied the pulpits of two Loyalsock Township churches that were assigned to him by the Central Pennsylvania Conference of ministers: Eagle United Methodist and Mill Creek United Methodist.

Ordainment, too, is in Wodrig's plans: he hopes to enter a seminary in about two years. First, however, he must complete college.

Wodrig, 42, is a Williamsport native. After graduating from high school, he became a draftsman at Anchor-Darling Valve Company, of Williamsport, where he remained for about 10 years. An emerging interest in law enforcement inspired him to switch careers and join the city police department.

If it wasn't for college, Wodrig said, he probably would have remained a policeman. But what amounted, in essence, to three full-time jobs were too much.

College gets $150,000 challenge

One of the greatest fund-raising challenges in Lycoming's history has been thrown the college's way.

The Kresge Foundation, of Troy, Mich., has notified Lycoming that it will receive a $150,000 grant for the new Physical Education and Recreation Center if the college can raise by May 15, 1981, the balance of the funds required to pay for the recently opened complex.

To date, the Partners in Progress Fund Drive has raised approximately $2.2 million toward the cost of the $3.1 million structure.

"We welcome this new challenge," said Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, college president, in announcing receipt of the grant. "I'm especially pleased that the Kresge Foundation has as much confidence in us as we do in ourselves, our alumni, and friends. The greatest fund-raising challenge in our history can and will be met. Lycoming College is preparing for the next century, and meeting this challenge is the way to prove we'll be ready for it."

The president said that with the Kresge grant the fund drive will move into a "challenge phase." He described this phase as an effort "to move from success to even greater success." When the new goal is met, he added, Lycoming will be able to operate its first-ever debt-free building. He called upon alumni, friends and supporters of Lycoming who have not yet contributed to the fund drive to help the college meet its new goal.

George P. Flint, director of the fund drive and of institutional relations for Lycoming, said: "We are very pleased that the leadership for this new challenge phase of the campaign is being provided by such a prestigious, nationally recognized source as the Kresge Foundation. Their hallmark is emphasizing financial management, academic quality and enrollment in evaluating college grant recipients."

The $150,000 grant is the first challenge grant ever received by Lycoming from any source, and the largest grant ever received from the foundation. Grants of $25,000 each were received from Kresge in 1969 for the Academic Center and in 1974 for the Science Building.

The physical education department moved into the new phys-ed center in early September, despite delays in receiving some office equipment and supplies. The building opened for recreation Sept. 8. Classes will be held in the complex beginning about mid-semester, when they move indoors.

Dedication of the building has been scheduled for Oct. 10 at 2:30 p.m.--the Friday of Parents Weekend. The ceremony will be open to the public.

Faculty focus: John G. Hollenback

John G. (Jack) Hollenback, the senior faculty member at Lycoming, has seen the face and ways of the college change almost beyond recognition in his nearly three decades on campus.

"The boys were on one side of campus, the girls were on the other," said the business administration professor of the "old" days. Faculty morals, too, were checked. Hollenback remembers when faculty smokers congregated outside the campus gate for cigarette breaks; tobacco was prohibited inside. Hollenback was at Lycoming when football was played in the quadrangle, old Main was the core of campus and recently-raised Bradley Hall was a busy place. He has swung with the changing times, and today, 28 years after his arrival at Lycoming, he still finds fun in his work.

"I'm a very happy and fortunate man," he said.

Hollenback was chairman of the business administration department for about 20 years, a post he recently resigned. Now having fewer administrative duties, he can devote more time to his students, most of whom he regards as "pretty solid people."

"They are more practical," Hollenback said of today's undergraduates, though hardly as conventional as the 1950's version, acknowledging marks left by the social uprisings of the late 1960's and early 1970's.

The veteran professor's association with Lycoming began before the modern college was established. Raised in Williamsport, Hollenback attended Dickinson Junior College, the forerunner of Lycoming, before and after World War II. He transferred to the University of Pennsylvania, where he earned bachelors and masters degrees from The Wharton School of Business. After graduating, Hollenback taught for two years at the University of Oklahoma, and learned something about academic environments.

Disenchanted by the big and impersonal classes of a large university, Hollenback returned to Williamsport and Lycoming in 1952 and stayed. The small-college atmosphere--with its close student-faculty relationships--has been the key bonding element gluing Hollenback to Lycoming.

With the college's classes, "I know everybody's name within two weeks," Hollenback said, adding that in such an atmosphere the important "flow between students and teacher" is more easily generated.

As senior faculty member, Hollenback has the honor of being college mace bearer--the carrier of Lycoming's symbolic staff of authority at formal academic events. Hollenback also served as college marshal for 10 years.

A bachelor, Hollenback resides in Williamsport with his African-born cat, Walter. Outside of academics, the professor is interested in gardening, music and photography. He is an avid reader.

Campus minister addresses annual freshman convocation

"Prayer and study are indispensable to life."
 So said Dr. John W. Betlyon, Lycoming College's first full-time campus minister, at the annual Freshman Convocation Sept. 3 in Clarke Chapel. He was the speaker for the 8 p.m. event, which officially welcomed approximately 385 freshmen to the campus.

Drawing on his extensive knowledge of the Jewish religion, the Harvard-educated Methodist minister said "study is holy activity" to the Jews. He said it is considered "prayer to God."

Dr. Betlyon urged the freshmen to take this Jewish philosophy of study to heart and to make it work for them, just as it has worked for the Jews over the centuries.

"Mankind survives through the grasp of truth through study," the 31-year-old minister said.

Dr. Betlyon closed by urging everyone in attendance to make Lycoming "abound in loving kindness and in truth" during the 1980-81 academic year.

The campus minister, who comes to Lycoming from North Carolina Wesleyan College, was introduced by Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, Lycoming president. Dr. Blumer also introduced the Dean of the college, Dr. Shirley Van Marter, to the freshmen.

Others participating in the convocation were Dr. Richard A. Hughes, chaplain of the college, who offered the invocation; the Rev. John Tamalis, chaplain to Roman Catholic students on campus, who offered the benediction, and Robert Bucknam, president of the student association, who greeted the freshmen.

The Lycoming College Concert Choir, under the direction of Dr. Fred M. Thayer, and John Shannon, college organist, provided music.

The convocation was a formal faculty event at which full academic dress was worn.

Campus notes

ROGER SHIPLEY, chairman of the art department, will exhibit a piece of his sculpture in the 61st Annual Regional May Show of the Cleveland Museum of Art. Another piece of his sculpture was on display all summer in a group exhibition at the Henri Gallery in Washington, D.C.

The Don Juan Papers, a book edited by Richard deMille and published by Ross-Erikson, includes an essay by STAN WILF, a member of the sociology-anthropology department. The essay is entitled "Don Juan on Balance."

The Williamsport Rotary Club has presented a 4-Way Test Award to Lycoming College for its service to the community. The four-way test is: Is it the truth? Is it fair to all concerned? Will it build good will and better friendship? Will it be beneficial to all concerned? Accepting the award for the college was BILL PUPP, director of public relations.

FRED GOGAN, chairman of the political science department, has been appointed to the Williamsport Planning Commission and the Williamsport Historical Architecture Review Board.

RICHARD HUGHES, college chaplain and a member of the religion department, spoke on "The Concept of Natural and Medical Care" at physicians' seminar at Williamsport Hospital in July.

MEL DIMENBA, of the biology department, has been appointed a regional advisor to Laboratory, the newsletter of the Association of Biology Laboratory Education.

Pastor receives Wertz Award

Lycoming College presented its first "Bishop D. Frederick Wertz Award" to the Rev. William L. Price, of Town Hill United Methodist Church, Shickspunny, P. D. 3, at the annual conference of the Central Pennsylvania Conference of The United Methodist Church in June.

The award, established by the college in honor of the Bishop of the West Virginia Area of The United Methodist Church, who was president of Lycoming from 1955 to 1968, recognizes outstanding service to the church. It was presented by Dale V. Bower, director of alumni affairs and church relations for Lycoming, in Haas Auditorium on the campus of Bloomsburg State College.

The Rev. Price was cited for his 18-year pastorate at Town Hill, which was comprised of seven rural churches in Luzerne County when the pastor was appointed. During this span, the Rev. Price received almost 900 persons into membership and merged the seven churches into one thriving congregation of approximately 650 members. The merger was completed in 1964. A new church building was dedicated in 1971.

In addition to serving his congregation, the Rev. Price served his community. He was secretary, treasurer or president of his township school board for 12 years, and was one of the founders of Luzerne County Community College.

Rev. William L. Price, pastor of Town Hill United Methodist Church, Shickspunny, P. D. 3, receives the Wertz Award from Lycoming College.

New campus minister, faculty, staff appointed

John W. Betlyon, new full-time campus minister, will be introduced at the annual Freshman Convocation Sept. 3 in Clarke Chapel.

Dr. John W. Betlyon, 31, comes to Lycoming from North Carolina Wesleyan College. He has a Ph.D. in divinity from the University of Chicago and has served as pastor of churches in North Carolina and Virginia.

Dr. Betlyon will be introducing the new campus minister, Dr. John W. Betlyon, at the annual Freshman Convocation Sept. 3 in Clarke Chapel. He will also be introducing the new campus minister, Dr. John W. Betlyon, at the annual Freshman Convocation Sept. 3 in Clarke Chapel.

Football: Warriors seek 3rd straight MAC crown

Before September has ended, the won-loss record of the Lycoming College football team should reveal a lot about the strength of the 1980 Warriors.

Coach Frank Girardi's gridders opened with Lock Haven State, Albright and Wilkes on successive Saturdays--all tough opponents, all on the road. "We are going to have to mature fast," Girardi said before pre-season workouts began.

The game with upriver-rival Lock Haven was dubbed as the leading Eastern small college game of the weekend with good reason: both teams are defending champions of their respective leagues. After falling, 15-12, to Lycoming last year, Lock Haven, of the rugged Division II Pennsylvania State College Conference, went undefeated in league play and captured the conference crown in a post-season playoff. The Warriors, meanwhile, won six in a row, sputtered briefly, then regained their composure and took Middle Atlantic Conference North honors for the second consecutive season.

Despite winning the championship, Lycoming could only squeak past MAC foes Albright and Wilkes in '79. Both opponents are expected to be improved this year.

Thus, after three games, Girardi should be better able to answer the big question: (1) Can Lycoming win a third straight MAC North title? (2) Does Lycoming have a chance for an NCAA Division III playoff bid? (3) Does Lycoming have a shot at winning the Lambert Bowl, symbolic of small college football supremacy in the East?

Considering the talent of both the returning players and freshmen, the Warriors again should be tough to beat. Their senior quarterback, Rick Burd (Lock Haven), is a special talent. A two-time all-conference performer who is expected to break most Lycoming passing records by November, Burd engineers the offense thoroughly. The small college All-America candidate threw 14 touchdown passes last year.

Burd's job is made easier by the abundance of talented backs and receivers. Three tailbacks, senior Dave Venezia (Norristown), and sophomores Thatcher Borman (Marysville) and Mike Santoleri (Berwyn), combined to gain 1,220 yards on the ground and score 10 TDs in '79.

Burd's primary targets this season are his brother, Mike, a junior tight end, and wide receivers Jeff Wert (Stroudsburg), a speedy sophomore, and junior Andy Ryan (Harrisburg).

The Warrior defense, stalwart last year, should be strong again, though perhaps not as unmovable as the '79 unit that lead the nation's Division III teams in scoring defense. The standout returnees are linebackers Ron Hoover (Snow Shoe) and Bob Sinnott (Lansdale), and safety Fran Harvey (Norristown).

Hoover and Sinnott may comprise the best linebacking duo in the MAC.

Hoover earned all-league honors in '79 and co-captain Sinnott, while not selected as an all-star, led the Warriors in tackles and assists. Both are seniors.

Classmate Harvey, an all-MAC selection, intercepted five passes last year. He also threw a TD pass and two-point conversion when, as a holder, he went to the air after bad snaps ruined field goal and extra point tries.

Nevertheless, graduation has left Girardi with some key holes to plug on the offensive, defensive and special teams. Positions were open during pre-season in the lines, where a few of the coach's highly-touted freshmen recruits got long looks. Girardi also needed to replace All-MAC placekicker Robbi Bleistein and punter Paul Scott, the Lycoming record-holder.

Despite the difficult schedule and a few lineup weaknesses, Lycoming remains the team to beat in the MAC North.

Soccer:

Soccer is on the rise all over America, and at Lycoming it is no exception. Second-year coach Scott McNeill has welcomed back 11 returning players from last year's vastly improved 6-6 team. And with the addition of some talented newcomers, the Warriors' outlook is for continued progress.

Leading returnees are junior full-back Robert Ortesio (Newport) and sophomore wing Gary Swart (Westfield, N. J.), both All-Middle Atlantic Conference North honorable mention selections in 1979.

The booters' opened a 12-game season Sept. 20 with a home match against Susquehanna. The Warriors, who play six of their first seven contests at home, face a rugged schedule that includes national powers Bloomsburg State, Elizabethtown, Lock Haven State and Scranton.

Despite the loaded slate, McNeill believes a winning season--Lycoming's first in a decade--is a reachable and realistic goal.

Tennis:

Although the lure of off-campus study has taken two returning players from the women's tennis team roster, eight others with experience are back from last year's 3-5 squad. With the addition of some freshmen, coach Deb Holmes is confident of continued improvement in the program she inherited five years ago.

Top returnees include seniors Sue Burch (Williamsport) and Katie Malloy (Lewisburg), and junior Shell Shaddy (Jersey Shore).

Nine matches are on the 1980 schedule, which opened with a home contest Sept. 22 against Mansfield State at the College Field courts. One new opponent, Upsala, has been added to the Warriors' slate. The team hopes to qualify for the newly-organized Middle Atlantic Conference playoffs held after the conclusion of the regular season.

Field Hockey:

After finishing strongly last year, coach Louise Courtney's field hockey team is hoping that the late-season momentum carries into 1980. With talented and experienced players returning, the winning may continue.

Three Middle Atlantic Conference North all-stars were among 10 veterans who reported to practice in early September. Senior sweeper Pat Nezelek (Endwell, N. Y.) and two sophomores, halfback Nancy Leyden (Cambridge, N. Y.) and goalie Robin Wert (Stroudsburg), were cited by the conference in 1979. A number of able freshmen also are vying for positions.

A 10-game schedule opened Sept. 22 with a home match against Mansfield State. The Warriors will duel with Wilkes, Susquehanna and Scranton for a spot in the MAC playoffs.
